John Cranley '99, Mayor of Cincinnati, Ohio

Inspired by family and faith, Mayor Cranley believes that public service should prioritize the common good to leave the world better than we found it while helping those who are in need. Those are the values that he and his wife Dena are passing to their son Joseph, and the values that guide him as mayor.

Since taking office in late 2013, he has helped bring more than 6,100 new jobs to Cincinnati; added officers to the street which has led to lower crime; added firefighters which effectively ended "brownouts"; resolved the city's pension crisis; approved a multi-year plan to repave and repair deteriorating roads; implemented a major anti-poverty program, the Hand Up Initiative; and is leading an effort to invest in solar energy to reduce the city's carbon footprint.

Mayor Cranley created the City's first Office of Economic Inclusion & Minority Contracting, aimed at increasing the number of minority firms awarded city contracts. Cincinnati has been recognized as one of the nation's most immigrant friendly cities, ranking 18th, and for the fifth year in a row received a perfect score on the Municipal Equality Index by the Human Rights Campaign.

Mayor Cranley has been a leader fighting climate change. Citywide emissions are down 18%, and the city is close to breaking ground on a 25-megawatt solar array to reduce Cincinnati's carbon footprint. Just recently, the city was awarded an American Cities Climate Challenge grant.

In 2002, Mayor Cranley co-founded the Ohio Innocence Project, an organization that has exonerated and freed 28 wrongfully convicted people through the use of DNA technology. He has also worked as a real estate developer and attorney.

Mayor John Cranley grew up in the Price Hill neighborhood and attended St. William Elementary School and St. Xavier High School. He has earned degrees from John Carroll University, Harvard Law School and Harvard Divinity School.

Susan H. Farbstein '04, Clinical Professor of Law and Co-Director of the Human Rights Clinic

Susan H. Farbstein is a Clinical Professor at Harvard Law School, where she directs the International Human Rights Clinic. Her current work focuses on Southern Africa, transitional justice, accountability litigation, community lawyering, and economic, social, and cultural rights. She has served as co-counsel in landmark human rights suits, including cases against the former Bolivian president and defense minister for extrajudicial killings in Bolivia; against Shell Oil for aiding and abetting torture and extrajudicial killings in Nigeria; and against major multinational corporations for aiding and abetting human rights violations in apartheid South Africa.

She has authored numerous amicus curiae briefs to the US Supreme Court on a variety of legal questions, from corporate accountability for human rights abuse to the immunity of foreign government officials. In 2015 she was selected by Massachusetts Lawyers Weekly as one of the Commonwealth's "Top Women of Law." In 2018 she was selected by the Harvard Women's Law Association as a "Woman Inspiring Change." She holds a BA from Princeton University, an MPhil from the University of Cambridge, and a JD from Harvard Law School.
